VanAntwerp—Chiles.

On last Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock, the First Presbyterian church, was artistically decorated in wedding attire. The aisle ways, the electric pendings, the rostrum, the entrance and a huge French mirror were the beautiful autumnal flowers, principally, the chrysanthemums, arranged with vines and evergreens, of delicate perfection; gorgeous, delicate, beautiful. It was the wedding evening of Dr. Howard VanAntwerp and Miss Caroline Mitchell Chiles. Promptly at the stated hour, the wedding march from vibrating and melodious strings filled the large and elegant auditorium and to its time, ushers, maid of honor, flower girls, the ministers, brother and groom, the father and bride took their positions and beautiful solemn and impressive ceremony by the pastor Rev. A. J. Arriek and former pastor, Rev. H. L. Nave, two bright and promising young lives were made one, and as they turned to march down the exquisite aisle we read in their happy faces this, some one's definition of love: "Love is the celestial breathing of the atmosphere of paradise."

A more beautiful decorated room it has never been our fortune to see. It was the professional work of Mr. Honaker, of Lexington, who is at the top as a floral decorator.

Ropes of smilax extended down the center aisles with chrysanthemum capped pillars to each pew's entrance. Opening to the chancel were two huge flower gates which swung from massive chrysanthemum capped pillars. The chancel rails were covered with smilax and in the rear was the large French mirror imbedded in a wall of green, interspersed with the

SHORT IN HIS ACCOUNTS

Geo. C. Everett, Postmaster at Mt. Sterling, Loses His Position.

WHO WILL BE NEXT?

Mr. George C. Everett, Postmaster at this point when his office was checked up the past week, was found short in his accounts $3050. Mr. Everett has, without doubt, been recklessly careless in the management of the money affairs of the office, but not even his bitterest foe is willing to charge him with dishonesty. On every hand we hear expressions of regret that this misfortune, self brought on though it may be, should have overtaken him.

After an investigation on Wednesday morning, last, the office was turned over to Mr. Everett's bondman, who are said to be Henry M. Woodford, Miller Anderson and Mrs. Josiah Anderson. Mr. Howard Anderson, who has been chief clerk under Mr. Everett, was temporarily placed in charge of the office. He will serve till Mr. Everett's successor is appointed. Mr. Everett does not attempt to account for the shortage. He simply says he has turned over all he has and cannot account for his shortage.

There are already several applicants for the position among them Howard Anderson, Claude Hazelrigg, Squire Turner, Mrs. Fannie Priest and Capt. W. T. Havens. Several others are proposing to enter the contest and before the end of the week we may have a number of other applicants.

Court-day—A New Departure.

The usual Court-day exercises were varied by the introduction of a new feature yesterday. After consultation the pastors agreed to try the experiment of spending an hour in religious services. The noon hour was chosen as most suitable, as it was thought to be a time of leisure and would not interfere with the date of Court-house officials.

The experiment was a success beyond all expectations. After a song had been sung on the steps the announcement was made that Rev. W. T. Tibbs would preach in the Court-house. In a few moments the room was filled by an attentive and eager crowd of men and after a speech proclaiming service by the ministers, Bro. Tibbs delivered a timely and earnest sermon. The religious service is to be a feature of Court-day hereafter. The ministers of the various churches will preach in rotation and arrangements will be made to have the singing an interesting element. It is designed to make the exercises entertaining and enjoyable as well as helpful and uplifting, and a hearty invitation is extended to all. Rev. A. J. Arriek will preach next Court-day.

Saturday evening an electric car filled with people plunged through a drawbridge at Cleveland, O., into the river one hundred feet below. Nineteen lives are known to have been lost.

A LONG REACH!

The way to make money reach a long way is to invest it right. The first cost is the point where a short-sighted man stumbles on the road to economy. He thinks it extravagant to pay $10 for a Suit of our Clothes when $8.00 will buy a Suit somewhere else. He forgets that the $8.00 Suit won't last very long or look very well. Maybe it will fade the first time the sun shines on it.

THE BRIGHT SIDE.

Bright and buoyant.
When I crowded her, she said:
"I'm only crushed. Don't fret, I pray."

When I broke the heart of her,
She said in her hopeful way:
"Well, I was only glad to say."
Kindly, merry Nanny!

THE CUT ROPE.

"You know the old adage, Lawrence, 'All's fair in love and war.' I shall do nothing unfair, but I decline to admit that you have any monopoly in that quarter, as yet at least."
"That's just like you, Grant—putting your car in where you're not wanted."
"And how do I know that I'm not wanted? Not wanted by you, I admit, but it seems to me that Miss Morland herself has some right to be consulted in this matter. I shall ask her."
"You will do nothing so silly."
"Where's your right, my friend, to dictate?"
"I shall not discuss the matter with you, Grant. Everything points to my being accepted, and I intend asking Miss Morland before we leave for England."
"Pshaw! That's quick work. Do you bear in mind that we start for home the day after tomorrow?"
"Perfectly," and thereupon Lawrence began to walk somewhat faster than they had been doing.
The other was, however, not to be denied and strode after him.
"Look here, old man, there is no use quarreling about it. Suppose we both try our luck. I, too, have made up my mind to ask Miss Morland to be my wife and shall do so before I leave—that is, unless I hear of your having been accepted. Let us toss up to decide who is to be the first to ask her. It strikes me we are both somewhat nervous."
"Nonsense. I know better."

It was a cloudless day in the high Alps in early September. Two ladies were seated under the veranda of a hotel that from a height looked down upon the long, narrow valley in front girdled as by a snow clad mountain and intersected by a rapid glacier fed stream. The summer visitors were daily taking flight, for the evenings were already frosty and cold, and some ominous flakes of snow had fallen. On the farther side of the valley two pedestrians might be described skirting the lower edge of the snow pine woods from which they had just emerged.
"There's Apollo and Mr. Grant," said the younger one of the ladies, a girl of some 18 years.
"Ada, I do wish you would give up that horrid habit you have of nicknaming people."
"Why, mamma, it is very appropriate, you will admit, in this case. He is so handsome! Apollo Belvedere we christened him. He lives at the Belvedere hotel, you know," said the girl, ignoring the general rebuke and skillfully substituting what was only a specific piece in defense.

"But even if appropriate it is not well for a young lady to speak of people in that way; at any rate, to make a practice of it, as you do."
"There, now, what shall I finders we are. But I shall really try to break off the habit. The two gentlemen, then, let us say, are evidently coming this way. I suppose it's your own hotel—pretty well deserted."
"You seem to take great interest in the gentleman."
"In which one, mamma? Pray, tell me, for they are both interesting, are they not? From what I have seen of them I like them both, I am free to admit."
"Somewhat too free, my dear, if it were not that you make the admission to your mamma alone. I meant Mr. Lawrence."
"Oh, Ah—There, I beg pardon; it almost escaped me again."
"Now, do give up that levity for a moment, Ada. I want to ask you in all seriousness which of them it is to be. Your papa and I have been discussing matters, and we both want to know."
"And I must confess at once!"
"Yes."
"Well, then, neither—for three years at least. I am not going to be like a certain lady who was slightly better than anybody else who married at 18 and is now taken for my sister. Poor me, but how very satisfactory to her, dear mamma. But as the gentlemen themselves are approaching hadn't we better change the subject?"

"Presently, my dear. And if those three years were gone—or, abbreviated, shall we say?—I suppose it would be Mr. T. the other."
"You may suppose so, of course. I almost think that I suppose so too."
By this time the two friends had come up. They were, as we have seen, leaving for home on the next day but one and had arranged for a snow excursion on the morrow across the glacier whose white mass would be seen, placid and cold, over the tops of the pine trees. For two months they had been together in Switzerland, and they had been so within the last four weeks. But the advent of Mr. and Mrs. Morland had gradually and imperceptibly wrought a change in their relations. Both had been attracted to Miss Morland—the artist, Lawrence, by her beauty most of all, while the other had sought and found solace from the distractions of a London literary life in her native charm of manner and intellectual culture. Neither up to that morning had ever hinted to the other his aspirations or hopes, but many situations are developed without words, and each came to regard the other as his sole rival—Grant regretfully, Lawrence with the arrogance and secret dislike of an ill balanced mind.

"Is it true that you are going to leave us so soon?" asked Mrs. Morland after the first salutations were over.
"Yes; we're off on Wednesday, back to town," Grant replied.

"And shall we have the pleasure of seeing you in London this winter, Mrs. Morland?" asked Lawrence.
"I hardly know. Mr. Morland talks of San Remo and Florence and Asia of Algiers, so far that in any case our steps will not be northward."

And then they began to discuss the latest home news, only ten days old, as it appeared in the Doris Zeitung, a four page, half German, half English, and to talk of recent departures from St. Moritz, Pontresina and Davos.

Meanwhile Grant seized the opportunity to engage Miss Morland in a few minutes' earnest conversation apart, which, pleasant as it seemed to both parties, did not appear to promote Lawrence's equanimity. But it required the sharp eyes of Mrs. Morland to detect that the artist was at no time accustomed to "wear his heart upon his sleeve." However, without further episode the gentlemen took their leave and together returned to their hotel.

Next morning rose bright and cloudless and found the two pedestrians already on their way to the upper slopes, where, flanked on either hand by crags and cliffs and pinnacles of rock, lay the glacier they were about to cross. It had been arranged that they should make the descent into the adjoining valley by way of the Steiler pass to the village of Thus, where they would reach in time to catch the diligence in the evening and so return to Doris. A guide had been dispensed with, and indeed with their experience in mountaineering and the comparative ease of the march, expedition there was no occasion for one. The few early watchers from the hotel balconies could easily describe them when they had cleared the wood and proceeded along the pass over the grassy acclivities on to the moraine and thence to the glacier.

Over this their course was toilsome and slow. The sun's heat of the previous day had melted the surface of the snow, only to have it frozen hard and slippery at nightfall. In the higher altitudes, too, a slight covering of snow had fallen, treacherous to the foot and in addition sliding down the night lurk underneath. However, they were seen to reach the sky line, to linger on the highest level of the snow as if for a short breathing space for a few minutes, and resuming their toilsome task to disappear down the other side.

"Here, Lawrence, I will let you have the benefit of carrying the ax on the way down," said Grant. "If there are any places to be cut, I will let you know in good time."
Grant was leading, as he had done all along since they had quitted the stones of the moraine. A strong rope some 20 yards long, with the opposite end passing round the waist of each, bound them together. Half of the distance over the glacier had been accomplished when suddenly the leading man slipped and fell at a dizzy precipice. The descent. Before Lawrence had noticed it the loose rope had become taut, and in an instant he had lost his footing and was following his companion in his rapid glissade. A few moments later still, he was pressed accelerated to a dangerous degree, though at first the motion was pleasant enough, and Lawrence's subsequent wild efforts to retard it with the help of his ax were vain because of their wildness. Their course had become almost headlong when he saw his companion, who was somewhat in front, bound off a shelving mass of snow and then disappear. Next moment the ax was caught on the same shelf, buried to his shoulders, and felt himself almost suffocated as the rope tightened around his waist and chest.

He was safe so far, but in deadly peril on this edge of a crevasse, into the depths of which his companion's weight was slowly dragging him. To seek to stay his downward course with the help of his ice ax and devise some means of rescue for his friend was the one imperative step that lay before him. But that step, though he bitterly regretted it, he did not take. A struggle of conflicting emotions, of past friendship and present jealousy, of sympathy and despair, and in one overwhelming moment of exalted cowardice he struck a blow at the rope, now strained to its utmost tension. One of the strands gave way, but the other two still held together, though almost at the breaking point. Another blow, a muttered curse and again a wild stroke, and then Lawrence was free, his safety was assured, with a sickening feeling at heart that whispered to him, "Murderer."

Without venturing near to peer over the edge of the yawning chasm, he crawled on hands and knees from the fatal spot and slowly retraced his steps over the glacier. He had pressed one of mind onto to lay the ends of the telltale strands of rope before reaching his hotel, whence a search party was immediately dispatched for the recovery of the unfortunate Grant's body. It was sunrise the next morning before they reached the fatal spot. Traces of the tragedy were all too apparent on the surface of the snow, but the icy cavern hid all else in its depths. A man hovered. His face was pale when he was drawn up, and it was some time ere he could speak.

"I slipped off a ledge some 30 feet down," at last he managed to say. "And thought my last hour had come. Nothing below me but the walls of ice as far as I could look. The fall would kill him at once."

"Those who are living 20 years hence will find his body at the foot of the glacier," said old Andreas Mettler, the guide. "I remember when a boy an accident like this, and the body was found unchanged after all that time."

It was some days ere Lawrence could set off for home. There had been a heavy fall of snow, and the roads were blocked and all traveling by diligence stopped. His physical condition would not have allowed him to venture at once so long a journey, and his overwrought nerves had given away completely. Nor did the manifest sympathy of all about him help much to recover his buoyancy of spirits. His condition was ascribed to grief, and his friend's loss and in a lesser degree to his imminent peril at the time of the catastrophe. But could the sympathizers have read the secrets of his mind they would have known that he was a prey to bitter shame and the grief it engenders, and that now his friend's fate and his own treachery were ever before him in all the horrors of the situation.

On the evening before his departure, however, he summoned courage enough to press his suit with the unwitting cause of his crime.
"Don't ask me now, so soon after your friend's death," was all she said, but to the man who had never felt sure that his subsequent wooing would be anything but a hopeless quest.

She had promised to write to him, a promise that to his mind practically assured his position, and possibly he was right. No suspicion of the real cause of the accident had occurred to any one. His secret was buried in two cold bosoms—his own and the glacier's.

Twice he had long letters from Miss Morland, one from Chur on their journey to Italy, the other on their safe arrival at San Remo, and then they suddenly ceased, nor to his repeated inquiries was any answer vouchsafed.

It was New Year's morning, and Lawrence was lingering over breakfast, the paper propped upon the table in front of him. Lying among his letters was a small box with no plain postmarks. He opened it, wondering who had sent it, for the writing bore some semblance to a hand he used to know well. Wrapped in a sheet of a Florence newspaper was a small piece of rope—that and nothing besides. One end was cut straight across. Two strands of the other also were cut through unevenly. The third was somewhat longer and was not cut. It had evidently broken under a heavy strain.

"His body has been found," he muttered to himself with clattering teeth, his face now ashen pale. And then his eyes caught the first column of the newspaper as it lay on the toast rack in front of him and mechanically he read:
"At Florence, on Dec. 24, by the Rev. F. R. Murray, Robert Henry Grant, Ada, only child of Edward Morland."

It only remains to add that Lawrence's companion had been rescued by a party crossing the glacier from the other valley, who had come up just as the former's rope was disappearing over the hill. The marks in the snow arrested attention, and Grant's seemingly lifeless body was resting on the ledge below. All haste was made back to the hotel they had quitted, but it was several weeks ere the invalid was pronounced out of danger. On recovering he had gone to San Remo to recruit. The rest followed in due course.—Exchange.

OUTFITTERS FOR "THE FINEST."

What May Be Seen In The Rooms of a Police Department Establishment.
Though the way of the transgressor be hard, he finds many benevolent persons ready and anxious, if not to make it easy, as some cynics accuse them of wishing to do, at least to rob it of some of its attendant terrors. The last to enroll himself in this band of philanthropists is the inventor of "the humane police club." He has observed the danger of the wooden club, even when it is used with discretion and good judgment, and has lighted, as he thinks, upon a solution of the difficulty attending the forcible persuasion of the lawless element. He has perfected and now has on sale a club with a central core of hickory enveloped in soft india rubber. It is 14 inches long and weighs 13 ounces.

The effects of this club are said to be exceedingly satisfactory, at least to the person who wields it. The opinions of the subjects have not, apparently, been collected. In its use the vessels and substance of the brain are not injured, nor is the skull fractured, the skin broken nor blood brought except at the nose. It may, as the inventor admits, blacken an eye or break an arm. Experiments on catfishes, animals and violators of the law," he adds, "confirm these claims."

"That's a fact," said the dealer through whom the weapon is introduced to the trade. "He went to some up town morgue or hospital one day and came back here with sections of two skulls he had been pounding with the club, one that of a boy of 17 and the other that of a man of 45. Neither was fractured."

This dealer is a member of one of the only two firms in New York which supply everything needed, except the actual cloth for the uniforms, to equip a first class police force. They send handcuffs, shackles, leg irons, clubs, shields, dark lanterns, etc., to hardware dealers all over the country. There isn't much change in the styles from year to year, and the applicants for bracelets and anklets have only a few patterns to choose from. Of handcuffs, for example, there are only two distinct styles in use, both covered by patent. The most approved is locked by a key as well as by the spring which snaps when they are slipped over the hands. Every man-of-war carries a large supply of leg irons and handcuffs for use in an emergency.

Some of the most interesting appliances for capturing and restraining criminals are those ingenious devices known as "nippers." These consist of a single handcuff, which is opened by means of pressure upon a spring button and closes around the wrist of the prisoner as soon as a second button striking the wrist releases the spring lock. Their merit lies in the quickness with which an arrest can be effected by their use.

"Twisters," or chain nippers, are made with a chain connecting two interlocking handles and are especially esteemed for their lightness. Of ordinary clubs and billets there is a large variety in locust, rosewood, ironwood, cocobolo, and lignum vitae. A modest ironwood billet may be had for 40 cents, while a handsome presentation baton richly ornamented and tipped may cost as much as $25.—New York Tribune.

Is Light Bad For The Eyes?
A paper was recently read before one of the American medical associations in which the ground was taken that too much light is exceedingly bad for the eyes of school children. This is a rather peculiar theory in view of the fact that the Creator of the universe made eyes and then made light so that people could attend to their various duties and pleasures. The trouble is not too much light, but the wrong kind of light. Out of door life is conducive to perfect vision. The sun of mid-day rarely affects the normal eye unpleasantly. It is the reflected light, the filtered light, so to speak, the bound in and hampered and dimmed light that does the mischief. The light that strikes sharply on one point and reflects to another is the sort of light that does the harm. It is recommended that light be regulated and modulated to suit the eyes of children, but it is a question whether this will have the desired effect. What is necessary is that light be steady and plenty of it without glare or reflecting.—New York Ledger.

Force of Gravity of Glass.
Below a certain weight and volume has been shown by recent electrolytic experiments made by Professor Roberts Austen of the royal mint. A piece of glass passed through a vessel containing an amalgamation of sodium, separated by a glass partition from mercury. After awhile the amalgam was found to have lost a certain amount of its weight, while the same amount had been added to the mercury. The same result was obtained with an amalgam of lithium, but with potassium, whose atomic weight and volume are high, the same could not be penetrated.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Tuesday, November 19, 1895.

On Saturday the Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners for Montgomery county filed their report with the County Clerk. The report shows that there is on hand now $23,990.10 with the interest on $9,342.37 from April 2, 1895, and interest on $818.25 from July 8, 1895, making the total amount due from the Treasurer of the Sinking Fund something over $24,000. Of this amount there lies in bank over $13,600, leaving in the hands of the Treasurer and by him loaned out less than $10,500; for this the county has the names of J. C. Tyler, W. T. Tyler, Smith Hansford, Lewis Apperson and Mrs. Sallie Berry, to make it good. There has been a good deal of talk indulged in, in certain quarters about the Treasurer of the Sinking Fund and what he was doing or had done with the money. It is to be hoped this report by the Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners will put these uneasy spirits at rest. The $13,600 now lying in bank is, of course, not drawing interest. The interest on this $13,600 for the more than a year till it can be used at 6 per cent. would amount to nearly enough to buy a $1,000 bond.

But there were so many who were so absolutely certain that Mat Tyler was following in Dick Taylor's footsteps that Mr. Tyler, the Treasurer of the Sinking Fund, has concluded to call in his loans and give the entire Board the opportunity to lend the money if they can. There has been a great deal of malicious talk indulged in against an honest man, and some of it by people who should know better than to give any sort of credence to such slanderous rumors. Every dollar of the county's money is as safe as ordinary human prudence can make it, and when the bonds fall due January 1, 1897, the money will be forthcoming to pay for them. The false rumors were started for political effect. These rumors had their effect in the election of certain Republican county officials. In the matter of interest alone, there is a sight a loss of $1,000. What, in addition to this, these Republican county officials will cost the county no one may be able to tell.

It is claimed by the Republicans that Jerry Porter, the Republican nominee for Railroad Commission in the First District, was elected instead of Deungray. A letter to the Governor from Judge W. H. Vest, who is acting as Porter's attorney, states that an officer in one Greenwell precinct failed through clerical error to count 218 votes cast for Porter, which, if included, would give him the victory. A hearing before the Canvassing Board was asked, but the Governor replied that a certificate of election must be issued according to the returns on file and that Mr. Porter's remedy is by contest.

The Courier-Journal's Washington correspondent has been studying the membership of the new Congress, and finds that out of the 105 Democrats who will make up the minority of the House not more than a dozen have the capacity and experience necessary to meet Republican attack in the House, and there are not thirty who are in harmony with the Administration on the currency question. Two-thirds of the Democratic members of the last Congress who were re-elected are silver men.

The Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs has replied to the note of the British, Russian and French Ambassadors, as he had previously replied to that of the Representatives of Germany, Austria and Italy, evading the request for information as to the measures for restoring order in Armenia.

The defeated Republican candidates for municipal offices in Lexington make some serious charges, in their notice of contest, against the officers of election in one of the voting precincts.

Judge E. C. O'Rear appointed on last Monday the following named gentlemen as the board of supervisors: T. F. Rogers, W. P. Oldham, John C. Trimble, Robert Fietche, English Anderson, W. O. Chenault and Campbell Gibson.

Married, on last Saturday at the home of the bride's parents, Elder E. W. Trimble officiating, Mr. Samuel Oldham to Miss Ida, daughter of J. M. Hall.

The west bound 7:30 train has been changed to 9:40, the East and West trains meeting here giving the p.m. double work.

G. L. KIRKPATRICK, Clerk, by W. M. GAY, D. C.

Manatee Circuit Court closed up her business on last Thursday and adjourned. Judge John E. Cooper and Commonwealth's Attorney Nesbitt, were there for business and the Court moved like clock work. Attorneys who were not ready for trial had to get ready or furnish a mighty good excuse so that no time was lost. Mr. John H. Lyons, sheriff, with his deputies had everything up to the notch. Mr. Lyons is one of the promptest officers the county has ever had. H. D. Cobble, Circuit Clerk, keeps a fine set of books; knows just where the papers in each case are, and it was no trouble with such officers and the efficiency of Jailer Thos. Greenwald to keep the Court business on a brisk move. The business men of Manatee are in good shape and we heard very little complaint of hard times.

The Ideal Panacea 6

James L. Francis, Alderman of Chicago, says: "I regard Dr. King's New Discovery as an Ideal Panacea for Coughs, Colds and Lung Complaints, having used it in my family for the last five years, to the exclusion of physician's prescriptions or other preparations."

Rev. John Burgess, of Keokuk, Iowa, says: "I have been a Minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church for 50 years or more, and have never found anything so beneficial, or that gave me such speedy relief, as Dr. King's New Discovery." Try this Ideal Cough Remedy now. Trial bottle free at W. S. Lloyd's drugstore.

Who Will Be Postmaster?

This matter of choice is conceded to the Congressman where a vacancy occurs; hence Hon. Jo M. Kendall will name the man. Mr. Kendall, however, would no doubt like to be advised as to the qualification of the applicants and we understand that it will be his aim to select from the Democratic ranks, the strictly business applicant who can best conduct the affairs of the office. This is right. This will please the patrons of the office, and if Mr. Kendall cannot satisfy himself from the letters of endorsement—and this will be hard to do—he had better look over the field for himself and then give it to some person who would meet every demand, even though he go outside those applying. All the Advocate asks is the best qualified Democrat in Montgomery county, and whoever Mr. Kendall appoints will be satisfactory to us.

How many young men and young women are cut off just as the future seems brightest and fullest of promise? They are taken away by the disease which causes over one-sixth of all the deaths in the world—the disease which the doctors call consumption. There is absolutely no reason in the world why consumption should be fatal—why it should even be serious. It is a disease of the blood, and can be cured absolutely and always by purifying and enriching the blood. The only exception to this is the case where the disease has been neglected and improperly treated until it is stronger than the body—until the body has become so weak as to have lost the ability to recuperate. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption if used according to directions. It also cures all lingering coughs, bronchial and throat affections.

Send 21 cents in one-cent stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., and receive Dr. Pierce's 1008 page Common Sense Medical Adviser, illustrated.

Mr. Ben Sexton, of Meigs county, died Sunday morning from a complication of troubles, aged 65 years. Mr. Sexton was an ex Confederate soldier, was a brave, true soldier and an honest and well known citizen. He was Constable in the Frenchburg precinct and gave attention to this office the same as if he was receiving from it a handsome compensation.

Sunday morning Sam Turley undertook to mount a young horse, and somehow he lost his balance and was thrown violently to the ground and received a very painful and serious injury. His right leg was broken just above the ankle. Sam served three years on the police force without receiving a scratch, and had been on the farm but two weeks when he gets a broken leg. A policeman who is daily in contact with all kinds of men is considered in danger all the time, but from this experience it seems that farm life is more dangerous.

Anyone Can Dream Success.

It's quite another thing to win it. When a business grows as anyone who-awake can see that this is growing, there's surely good reason for it. We know what those reasons are. So do thousands of successful buyers hereabouts. We want more thousands to know. A confidence exists between the people and the business born of an acquaintance of 25 years' mutual service. Certainly that patrons get the largest selection of goods at our store and what they produce of this, we set out it can be given for. The confidence we have as we do better. We can trust the people to discover what is in their own interest. Working carefully seems to double one's strength.

THE FIRST SEWING MACHINES.

An English Inventor More Than a Hundred Years Old.

A London cabinet maker called Thomas Saint, in about 1790, took out a patent for a machine for sewing leather, or rather for "quilting, stitching and making shoes, boots, splatdashies, clogs and other articles." This patent, unfortunately, was taken out along with other inventions in connection with leather, and it was quite by accident that, some 80 years later, the specification of it was discovered by one who had made for himself a sewing machine in connection with sewing machines. Even the patent office did not seem to have known of its existence, yet now it is clear enough that Thomas Saint's leather sewing machine of 1790 was the first genuine sewing machine ever constructed, and that it was on what is now known as the "chain stitch" principle. Rude as it was, it is declared by experts to have anticipated most of the ingenious ideas of half a century of successive inventors, not one of whom, however, could in all human probability have as much as heard of Saint's machine. This is not the least curious incident in the history of the sewing machine.

In Saint's machine the features are the overhanging arm, which is the characteristic of many modern machines, the peculiar action of the Singer machine, the over point of needle of the Howe machine, the pressure surfaces peculiar to the Howe machine, and a "feed" system equal to that of the most modern inventions. Whether Saint's machine was ever worked in a practical workshop or not, it was unquestionably a practicable machine, constructed by one who knew pretty well what he was about and what he wanted to achieve.

Now note the date of Thomas Saint's patent (1790), and next note the date of the invention of Bartholomew Timmonier of St. Etienne, who is claimed in France as the inventor of the sewing machine. In 1830 Timmonier constructed a machine, principally of wood, with an arrangement of barbed needles, for stitching gloves, and in the following year he began business in Paris with a partner, as an army clothier. The firm of Timmonier, Petit & Co., however, did not thrive, because the owners thought they saw in the principal's machine an instrument destined to ruin them—much as the Luddite valued steam machinery in the cotton districts of England. An idea of that sort rapidly germinates heat and Timmonier's workshop was one day invaded by an angry mob, who smashed all the machines and compelled the inventor to seek safety in flight. Poor Timmonier was absent from Paris for three years, but in 1834 returned with another and more perfect machine. This was so coldly received, both by employers and workmen in the tailoring trade, that he left the capital, and journeying through France with his machine, paid his way by exhibiting it in the towns and villages as a curiosity. After a few years, however, Timmonier fell in with a capitalist who believed in him and his machine, and all promised well for the new firm, when the revolution of 1848 broke out, stopped the business and ruined both the inventor and the capitalist. Timmonier died in 1857 in a poorhouse of a broken heart.

The French machine was also on the chain stitch principle, but it was 40 years later than Saint's. In between the two came, about 1832, one Walker Hunt of New York, who is said to have constructed a sewing machine with the lock stitch movement. Some uncertainty surrounds this claim and Elias Howe is the person usually credited with this important, indeed, invaluable, invention.—Chambers' Journal.

Expensive Two Cent Mistake.

When legal papers are served by mail the postage must be prepaid in full to make the service valid. The office boy of a prominent Broadway firm a few days ago put a 2 cent stamp on a letter containing the summons and complaint in a case and mailed it to the defendant's counsel. The postage was 2 cents short, and the defendant's counsel, after paying the additional 2 cents, was in a position to claim judgment by default on the ground that he had not been legally served. The plaintiff's attorney immediately got an order to show cause why the default should not be opened. There was a long argument in court and several lengthy affidavits were submitted. The case was finally reopened upon payment by the plaintiff of 40 cents.

Thus the time of the court for nearly two hours, $30 costs and the fees of two leading lawyers made necessary to correct a mistake of 2 cents by an office boy.—New York Herald.

A Common Make.

Judith—Whose make is your watch?
Brazilin—The fellow who sold it to me, I guess. He made about $30 on the transaction.—Roxbury Gazette.

Leather.

The multiplied and increasing uses of leather have led to the improved processes in its manufacture. In the Belfast factories, according to The Age of that city, the stock is run through a cutter, which cuts it up into strips about three or four inches long, the mills are oblong vats some 2½ feet deep and eight or nine feet long. In the middle of the vat is a partition, on one side being a revolving cylinder, the partition reaching to the end of the vat by a foot or more; the water is pumped from below into the vats, and the rags, paper, etc., having been cut up and put into the water, the mixture is formed. On putting the cylinder in motion, this mixture continually passes round and round the center piece, under the cylinder and over the bed piece, where the friction squeezes and tears the rags into pulp.

These machines are known as beating machines and the rags are put into a bleach tub with lime and water and beat 24 hours before being placed in the beating machines; by means of a confining pulley is carried into a large circular vat for storage, from which it is taken as needed, and by means of a force pump forced into another large vat where revolving paddles force it into a cylinder covered with a wire screen, where it loses part of its water, and, passing through the screen, comes in contact with an endless belt, or apron, over which it is evenly distributed. This belt is three feet wide, and passes under an iron roller of the width of the apron, and about three feet in diameter; the roller passing over the apron by means of adhesion takes up the pulp deposited on the apron, and continues to do so until it is of the desired thickness. The operator now passes a knife through the groove, rolls off the sheet of pulp from the roller, and a confining pulley board is the result; drying follows.

Nursing a Member of Parliament.

In the first place, the initial act of obtaining a seat in the house of commons is always great. Candidates are obliged, by the corrupt practices act of 1853 (which has fixed a maximum scale of election expenses, varying in amount according to the extent and character of the constituency) to furnish a return of their expenses, and, according to a blue book on the subject—issued in connection with the general election of 1882—it appears that close on a million of money was spent by the 1,307 candidates who fought for seats in the house of commons in that electoral campaign. The average expenses of the 670 successful candidates were about £700 each. But that does not, as a rule, represent a third of the financial cost of the honor and dignity of the office of member of parliament. Before the contest takes place the constituency has to be "nursed" with the view of obtaining the good will and support of the electors.

"Nursing" is a very expensive process. Many a candidate has spent from £1,000 to £5,000 a year for two or even five years before the general election in the constituency he aspires to represent. A newspaper has often been run by a prospective candidate at a tremendous loss, ostensibly for the laudable object of supplying the electors with news, but really to keep prominently before them the virtues of the man who is doing their courtesies, and the grandeur and magnificence of the political principles he supports.—Chambers' Journal.

Sociable to the Last.

The other night at the Garfield Club reception one of the old tars told the following yarn: There was a shrewd and witty old Irishman who took much pleasure in making sport of other shrewd people. He went to his lawyer and made his will. Among the provisions was that outside of the cost of the funeral he wanted the sum of £100.
"When do you want it spent, going to the graveyard or coming back from it?" asked the lawyer.
"Why, when going to the graveyard, to be sure."
"Why is that?"
"Well, I like to be sociable, and I can't be with you coming back, see?" and the lawyer saw.—Louisville Commercial.

He Wondered.

"My faith in human nature—womankind in human nature—is strengthened," remarked a hotel proprietor the other morning, as he opened his mail; "here is a towel belonging to the house returned to me with a line from a recent woman guest that it was inadvertently carried away by her. I wonder," he went on in this wicked manner, "how many of these towels are runnatively." "If the fact that the hotel name, in large letters, is across one end has anything to do with this rather unusual bit of feminine honesty?"—New York Times.

A Man Hint.

He—I don't want any woman to think I'm a fool.
She—Aren't you a little late in stating your wishes?—Detroit Free Press.

HIS TIP WAS DANGEROUS.

It Nearly Cost a Limb and Might Have Lost a Life.

In many of the hospitals here the wards are so crowded and the applicants for treatment so numerous that the physicians by tacit agreement decline to receive cases of long standing or of such a nature that the patient, if admitted, may be expected to occupy a bed for a long time.

There is a hospital superintendent in New York today who, when he was a hospital clerk, advised an applicant to lie about the history of his case, and so got him admitted. When he thinks of his kindness and what followed it, he shudders at the recollection.

The would be patient was suffering from a tubercular knee. He had been disabled for three years. The clerk knew that a case of three years' standing would be denied admission. He plotted the offender. "They won't examine you at first," he said. "Tell them your knee was all right until a few days ago. Then they'll accept you. Once they'll be all right."

The patient followed this advice and was admitted. But he didn't stop at that. When the surgeons examined his knee, he astonished them by saying that it had been well until a few days before. They thought it strange and cross examined him. He was firm.

That made all the difference in the world. Had he told them that the limb had been affected for three years they would have treated it in the ordinary way.

But heroic measures were necessary if what he told them was true, for then it seemed that the case was a case of cancerous growth and that amputation at the hip joint was necessary. This operation is often fatal.

The patient heard with firmness their decision to amputate. The date for the operation was set. On the day before it was to be performed the kind hearted clerk went into the ward to ask how the patient was getting along.

"My operation is set down for tomorrow," the man said.
"Operation!" said the clerk in surprise. "What kind of an operation?"
"Amputation at the hip. I may live through it. It's better to have it over anyway."

"Heavens, man!" exclaimed the clerk. "you don't mean to tell me you stuck to that story about your leg only having been affected for a few days? You told them the truth after you found you had been admitted?"
"No, I didn't," he of the bad limb responded. "They've questioned me several times, but I've stuck to my first story like a brick."

The clerk ran to the house surgeon in mad haste and confessed that he had "inspired" the false history of the case. There was a consultation of the surgeons. The operation has not taken place yet.

Better still, the patient walks on two good legs today. The clerk is superintendent. But when he thinks of what would have happened had he persisted for a day his friendly call upon the man with the bad leg he shudders.—New York Herald.

An Old Customer.

In a French restaurant noted for its wines there may be seen every night a smooth faced gray haired man, who always sits at a table alone and never speaks unless he is addressed. This man has been a steady customer for 15 years. He is extremely methodical. He always occupies the same chair at the same table, and if he has been previously pre-empted when he arrives he turns on his heel and goes away. Knowing this to be his custom, his favorite waiter tries to reserve them for him. But this is not always possible, because the table is a large one and would accommodate five, and to turn away a party for one, even though the latter is a steady customer, would not pay. Besides experience has shown that he will return the next night just the same.

The only persons who ever talk with him are the proprietor and his sons. They have learned to know him as an expert in wines, although, as he admitted in a moment of confidence, he is a lawyer by profession. Whenever a particularly fine wine is obtained by the house, he is notified of it, and his judgment of it is relied upon. He eats very little, but he always drinks at least one quart of wine, his favorite being rich and heavy burgundy.—New York Sun.

November Court Day.

Was a lovely fall day. About 800 cattle on the market, quality barely up to the average of last court. The market was brisk at the prices and most of the cattle changed hands. The best feeders sold at from $3.40 to $3.75; some good yearlings sold at 2 1/2 cents, but they were good. Light steers weighing about 600 or 700 pounds sold at from 24 to 25 cents. Cows and heifers fetched from 20 to 24 cts.

The following traders had stock at Fitzpatrick's yards: Salvers & Co., 118; Allen & Trimble, 111; O. H. Downing, 80; J. M. Rose, 65; H. F. Pieratt, 30; S. S. Taulbee, 23; J. W. Rotkwell, 25; Bayze & Co., 28; A. Bishop, 25; Jas. Hatcher, 35; George Hen, 15; J. W. Wheeler, 35; McIntosh & Co., 37; Wireman & Co., 60; Oldham & Welch, 56; Gamble & Dawson, 35; B. S. Phelps, 30; Green Stacy, 50; Riley Shandler, 13; Bruce Turner & Co., 40.

SALES.

Allen & Trimble sold to Weib & Co., Lexington, 10 850 lb heifers at 2 1/2 cts. J. M. Rose sold 10 850 lb heifers to Will Young, of Bath county, at 2 1/2 cts. Jesse Stafford sold to T. J. Jones, of Bath county, 16 750 lb steers at 2 1/2 cts. John Giamas bought of Davis O'neal 3 1000 lb feeders at $3.45 per hundred. John W. Bayze sold 10 1100 lb cows at 2 1/2 cts. Oldham sold H. Ming, of Bourbon county, 19 fine yearlings, 800 lb at 3 1/2 cts. B. Steel, of Bourbon county, bought 4 1200 lb feeders of Allen & Trimble at 3 1/2 cts, they were the best cattle on the market. Same parties sold C. H. C. Sayre, of Lexington, Ky., 18 cows and heifers 800 lb average at $3.10. Mr. Sayre bought about 40 head of cows and heifers at from 2 to 2 1/2 cts.

S. D. Goff, of Clark County, bought 4 head of heifers, weighing 800 pounds at $2.30.

Sam Lykins, of Morgan county, sold a lot of 1000 pound cows at $2.10.

C. H. Dalzell, of Bourbon county, bought 5 heifers of Holliday & Co., at 2 1/2 cts.

Salvers & Co. sold 10 cows and heifers weighing 800 pounds, to W. J. McCannaghy, of Nicholas county, at $2.30. The same parties sold 22 good yearlings, weighing 730 pounds at 3 cents. E. E. Peck, of Bath county, three 1000 pound steers of Wiseman & Co., at 3 cents. He also bought four 900 pound steers of Oldham & Welch at 3 cents.

O. H. Downing, of Fayette county, bought a lot of cows and heifers from 2 to 2 1/2 cts.

Bruce Turner sold to Warren Rogers, of Bourbon county, forty 1000 pound feeders at 3 1/2 cents.

A good many other sales were made, but we did not get them; but our readers can get a correct idea of the market from the sales we have given. The fat cattle market being so much better in prices, had its effect on the sales, and prices were firm.

Larabee (3), 2:12 1/2, by Jay Bird yields his position as the fastest new trotter of 1895 to Fred Kohl (3), by Guy Wilkes, dam by Nutwood, who won a heat at Lexington in 2:12 1/2.

Mr. J. Thompson, of Dublin, Ireland has sent George H. Ketchum an order for four of the best American trotters that can be found. Mr. Ketchum is now on the lookout for the horses. Mr. Ketchum made the acquaintance of Mr. Thompson when he made his European trip with John Splin.

Strathberry by Roseberry went a mile in 2:04 1/2 at Lincoln recently, the fastest mile ever traveled in Nebraska. The performance was against the watch and does not detract much from his 2:04 1/2 race record. Strathberry has lowered the track records of sixteen associations this year, beating 2:10 over four half-mile tracks and securing a record of 2:07 1/2 over one of them. His record on a mile track is 2:04 1/2, and he won seventeen races out of twenty started during the year.

Knapsack McCarthy, who has returned to New York after a long campaign with the harness horses, is very sweet on the sensational young pacer Frank Agan, who defeated Robert J. Joe Patchen and John R. Gentry in his last race at Louisville. He says he had driven the five-year-old an eight in 0:13—1:54 gait—this year, and that he is as sound as a bullet, with the best set of legs that he ever saw under a horse. Agan wears no hobbles or other irks, but he is a sluggish horse that has to be driven with a chain. McCarthy asserts that his horse had Robert J. and other top-sawyers beaten in the second free-for-all at Lexington when the chain got caught in the holder of the rein, and is trying to loosen it Knapp pulled the pacer off his stride, losing the heat and the race to Robert J. McCarthy has a very high opinion of Star Pointer, the five-year-old stallion by Brown Hal, out of Sweepstakes, the dam of Hal Pointer, that is in the Village Farm string. At Lexington he tackled both Star Pointer and Robert J. and he says the latter was the easier mark.
